Poetical.

TO HIM WHO FOR SIX DAYS.

To him who for six days a week
Our rarely call on his own,
How sweet to watch the Sabbath break,
And bless the light that heaven hath thrown!
Oh! welcome, more than tongue can name!
The dearest morn that greets our soul.
Is that the Sabbath bids proclaim,
Which shuns the busy world of toil.

From morn to eve—from morn to eve—
Still-waking but for work alone:
Oh! heaven, it is a blest reprieve
To have one day to call our own:
One day to breathe a wider span,
Unfeathered by the bonds of trade;
To leave the plodding world of man,
And view the world which God hath made.

HOW I CAME TO BE MARRIED.

It may be funny, but I've done it. I've got a wife and a baby. Shadows departed—oyster stews, brandy juleps, cigar boxes, bootjackets, absconding shirt buttons, whilst and dominoes. Shadows present—hoop skirts, bandboxes, guitars, long stockings, juvenile dresses, little wigs, low chairs, cradles, pup, pantomime, live syrup, soothing syrup, snuff, snuffins and doctor's bills. Shadows future—more nine-pound babies, more live syrup, etc., etc. I'll just tell you how I got caught.

I was always the dandiest, tea-custard, bushy fellow you ever did see; it was kind in my line to be taken with the shakes every time I saw a pretty gal approach me, and I'd cross the room to get nearer than nice one! "Awasn't because I didn't like the critters, for if I was behind a fence looking through a knot-hole, I couldn't look at you long enough."

Well, my sister Lib gave a party one night, and I stayed away from home because I was too bashful to face the music. I hung around the house, whistling "Old Dan Tucker," dancing to keep my feet warm, and watching the heads bob up and down behind the window curtains, and wishing the thundering party would break up so I could get to my room. I smoked up a bunch of cigars, and as it was getting late and mighty uncomfortable, I concluded to slip up the door-post. No sooner said than done, and I quickly found myself sing in bed.

"Now," says I "let her rip I dance till your womb gives out?" and cuddling under the quilts, Morphous grabbed me. I was dreaming of soft shell crabs and stewed tripe, and having a good time, when somebody knocked at the door and waked me up. "Rapped again," I laid low "rap, rap, rap!"

Then I heard a whispering, and I knew there was a whole raft of girls outside.

"Rep, rap, I!" Then Lib sings out—

"Jack, are you in there?" "Yes," says I.

Then came a roar of laughter.

"Let us in," says she. "I won't," says I. "Can't you let a fellow alone?"

"Are you abed?" says she.

"I am," says I.

"Get up," says she.

"I won't," says I.

Then came another laugh. By thunder! I began to get riled.

"Get out, you petticoated scarecrows!" cried. "Can't you get a beau without hauling a fellow out of bed? I won't go home with you—I won't; so you may clear out!"

Then throwing a hoot at the door, I felt better. But presently, oh! mortal buttons, I heard a still small voice, very much like sister Lib's, and it said—

"Jack, you'll have to get up, for all the girls' things are in there!"

Oh, Lord, what a pickle! think of me in a bed, all covered with shawls, muffs, bonnets and cloaks, and twenty girls outside waiting to get in! If I had stepped to think, I would have fainted on the spot. As it was I rolled out among the bonnet wire and ribbons in a hurry.

"Smash!" went the millinery in every direction. I had to dress in the dark—for there was a crack in the door, and the girls will peek—and the way I tumbled about was death on straw bats. The critical moment came. I opened the door, and found myself right among the women.

"Oh, my," leghorn cries one: "my dear, darling, winter velvet," cries another; and they pitched in—they pulled me this way and that, boxed my ears, and one bright-eyed little piece—Sal—her name was—put her arms right around my neck, and kissed me right on my lips. Human nature couldn't stand that, and I gave her as good as she sent. It was the first time I ever got a taste, and it was powerful good. I believe I could have kissed that gal from Julius Caesar till the Fourth of July.

"Well," says she, "we are sorry to disturb you, thought you see me home!"

"Yes," said I, "I will." I did do it, and had another snack at the gate too.

After that, we took a turtle-doving after each other, both of us sighing like a barrel of new cider when we were away from each other.

"Twas at the close of a glorious summer day—the sun was setting behind a distant hog pen—the chickens were going to roost—the bulldogs were commencing their evening song—the pollywogs in their native mudpuddles were preparing them for the shades of night—and Sal and myself sat upon an antiquated backlog, listening to the music of nature, such as tree-ticks, roosters grunting pigs, and now and then the mellow music of a distant jackass was wafted to our ears by the gentle zephyrs that sighed among the mulberry stalks, and came heavily laden with the delicious odors of hemlock and pigsties. The last lingering rays of the setting sun, glancing from the bright buttons of a solitary horseman, shone from a knothole in the hog-pen hill in Sal's face, dyeing her hair with an orange-peach hue, and showing off my threadbare coat to a bad advantage. One of my arms was around Sal's waist, my hand resting on the small of her back—she was laying with my auburn locks of jet-black hue; she was almost gone, and I was ditto. She looked like a grasshopper dying with the hiccups, and I felt like a mud-turtle choked with a codfish ball.

"Sal," says I, in a voice as musical as the notes of a dying swan, "will you have me?" She turned her eyes heavenward, clasped my hand, had an attack of the heaves and blind staggers, and with a sigh that drew her skin strings to her palate, said—

"Yes!" She gave clear out then, and squirmed in my lap. She cork-screwed, and I curled around, and rolled in it. I hugged her till I broke my suspenders, and her breath smelt of onions which had eaten the week before.

Well, to make a long story short, she set the day, and we practiced every night for four weeks how we would walk into the room to be married, till we got so we could walk as graceful as a couple of Muscovite ducks.

The night, the company, and the minister came the signal was given, and arm and arm we marched through the crowded hall. We were just entering the parlor door, when down I went, kerslap on the oilcloth, pulling Sal after me. Some cursed fellow had dropped a banana skin on the floor, and it floored me. It split an awful hole in my cushioning, right under my dress coat tail.

It was too late to buck out; so, clapping my hand over it, we marched in and were spiced, and taking a seat, I watched the kissing of the bride operation. My groomsman was a little tight, and he kissed her until I jumped up to take a slice; when oh, horro! a little six year old imp had crawled behind me, and pulling my shirt though the hole in my pants, had pinned it to a chair, and in jumping up, I displayed to the admiring gaze of the astonished multitude a trifle more white muslin than was pleasant. The woman giggled, the man roared, and I got mud, but was finally put to bed, and all my troubles ended.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND AND PROVIDENCE PLANTATIONS.

A PROCLAMATION.

BY THE GOVERNOR.

In the midst of the greatest calamity that has ever befallen our country, we should not be unmindful of the blessings which now showered upon us by the all-wise Disposer of events and destinies. Our adversities should not tempt us to forget either our dependence upon a common Father, or the multiplied mercies which accompany his chastenings. In the midst of war we are enjoying many of the blessings of peace. One granary is full to overflowing; many departments of industry bring their usual rewards to the toiling masses; neither pestilence nor famine assails us in our households; order reigns in our cities and towns; our common schools prosper; domestic quiet rewards obedience to the laws of man and God; and the people worship securely in their temples.

Thus blest, it fit that we should render thanks to the Supreme Ruler of the universe. And I therefore appoint THURSDAY, the 27th day of November instant, to be observed in this State as a day of public Thanksgiving, Prayer and Praise.

On that day let us assemble in our places of worship, and in our family and social circles, and render to a benevolent Creator the adoration of great hearts; beseeching Him also that He will continue to us the unnumbered mercies of the present; and especially that He will restore to us the national unity, peace and prosperity of former years; that He will guide our rulers in the discharge of their duties; that He will reward patriotism in the soldier and in the citizen; that He will banish treason, corruption and imbecility from high places; that He will preserve our constitution and save us from anarchy; that He will restore to us hostile States and estranged hearts; that He will prosper all our worthy enterprises and labors; and that He will protect those upon whom He has bestowed temporal blessings to bind up the wounds and cheer the hearts of such as faint beneath the heavy blows of adversity. In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State at Providence, this seventh day of November, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, and of independence the eighty-seventh.

WILLIAM SPRAGUE,
By His Excellency the Governor,
John H. Estey, Secretary of State.

THE COTTON PRIZE.

It is claimed by the rebels that they have in their possession 1,000,000 bales of cotton with which to reward anybody who will give them their independence—England or France, if they please to underwrite it, or to repay themselves for all the sacrifices they may have incurred when they shall have beaten us into penance and recognition. This quantity of cotton is estimated to be worth at present prices, two hundred millions of dollars. Believing that they hold a monopoly of cotton-growing sufficient to enable them to maintain very high prices for a year or two yet, it is believed by the Confederates that they may in some cases make money rather than lose it in consequence of the war. They believe that high prices will continue at least until this million of bales gets to market, and in this perhaps they are right.

But the next thing is the question of possession of this cotton when sold. If the confederate government claims it now, and takes care to establish its claim indisputably very soon, we shall be particularly obliged. It may promise well for confederate credit, just at the moment, but the final performance, we feel confident, will be in the interest of the United States Treasury. Mr. Chase would be very glad of a source of revenue so great as even a quarter of a million of bales of confederate cotton falling to us as the only inheritors of what once was thought to belong to the short-lived confederacy. The English look eagerly at this cotton we see—talk earnestly about it—and appear to think they will a claim that will be certain to cover a large share of it in the end, it is therefore only just to say to them that we consider the claim of the loyal people of this country a little stronger than theirs can be. We are also advancing rapidly on the road to its possession, and, being almost three thousand miles nearer to it than they are, we are confident of being the first to levy on it. Before another month can be spent in English and European debate over this prize, that actual possession which in this case makes more than nine points in the law, will be fixed in other hands than those of De Bow, or the confederate Secretary of the Treasury.

It is, in fact, nearly time that the several European nations that conceived themselves interested ceased to speculate very confidently on the possession of any of the property or produce of the United States. A few months hence it will be difficult for rebel envoys to open negotiations with foreign capitalists about this million of bales of cotton. Much of it will ultimately go to England, but not in confederate or British bottoms in defiance of law. Every bale on which the confederate power ever laid a claim, recognized by its grower, should be confiscated to the United States, and sold to help pay the vast debt the war will entail on us. Let us proceed to make something of this cotton ourselves, and keep it from tempting the cupidity of British "200" pirates, and the shallow greed of the statesmen who then try all sorts of devices to bring about intervention. We shall get large quantities of this cotton although the more desperate of the rebel leaders will burn much and try to burn it all. Possibly a quarter of that remaining in the south will be destroyed, but certainly not more than a quarter of it. The remainder will be worth a hundred and fifty millions of dollars—a sum well worthy our early attention.

GENERAL BURNside.

Whatever opinion may prevail respecting the removal of Gen. McClellan from the command of the army of the Potowmack, we are glad to see such a fair and wise reception accorded to his successor on the part of the press in general. He is neither blamed nor unduly enlarged—he is not sought to be connected in any way with the deposition of his predecessor, nor to be taken under the patronizing wing of any party or faction—but his promotion is simply and hopefully acquiesced in. This is right, and it will have a good effect among the soldiers. The army is our instrument for carrying out the will of the nation through the direction of the Executive. Efficiency is the great thing to be cared for in it by the people, and hence there should be no thought of making it the arena of political contention or of personal favoritism and antipathies. An officer is to be regarded simply as an officer, to be continued, elevated, removed and transferred as such exclusively, by the ordained authorities, who are to be held competent to the charge of this as of their other duties.

In this light Gen. Burnside accedes to the momentous command of the army of the Potowmack. There is no particular advantage at this promotion. If any change had to be made, Gen. Burnside was almost unanimously felt to be the man for the new trial. And trial it will be. But few men in any age have been found competent to command such a numerical force. The epoch of Napoleon itself produced but two or three such. But Gen. Burnside attempts the achievement after but limited service with a small command. He takes the reins too, in the very midst of a campaign begun in the worst season of the year. In one sense he has but little discretionary option. The very change by which he comes into power signifies the will of his government that he shall on no account pause or retreat in his line of operation, but that he must move on. That is the one great order written all over his commission, and if he does not heed it, he too, must retire and give place to some one who will.

In these circumstances it is the part of justice to Gen. Burnside, as well as of sound patriotism, to let him enter upon his work, with the substantial but quiet approbation of his countrymen. He is to be supported in every way he may need, to be trusted fully, and then let alone. Happily, his character is fitted to evoke this treatment—not being a brilliant man, nor a partisan, nor identified with any particular policy that arouses the passions of the people, but a sound, faithful and thus far successful officer, wholly devoted to his duties, and devoid of all self-seeking. We all wish him success, because our own, as a people, as a nation, is bound up with it.—Boston Journal.

LOCAL NEWS.

To the People of Newport.

U. S. A. GENERAL HOSPITAL.
Portsmouth Grove, R. I., Nov. 11th, 1862.

Mr. DEAR FRIENDS:—Having charge of the Housekeeping Department in this Hospital, I find several needs which public goodness can easily supply without any great demand being made upon it. You, who have so often aided me in the cause will perhaps do so again. I want specially: jellies, preserves, dried fruits and pickles or sauces. I want them in large quantities, therefore the less expensive kinds will suit me best. Berries, apples, or other fruits stewed in molasses. Vegetables of any kind in vinegar. Dried fruits, such as peaches, pears, apples, &c., and barrels of apples, are what I want. The better sorts of jelly, currants blackberry, &c., will also be most acceptable; but I want to impress upon you that as I need these things in large quantities, the better kinds will not go very far towards filling my needs.

I would also remind you that Thanksgiving Day is approaching, when you will all be happy in your family rejoicing. Shall we let these poor fellows, separated from their families, be without some cheerful enjoyment of the day?

We must provide at least a good dinner for them. If you will send poultry and other good things—pumpkin and other pies, &c., we should be truly grateful to you. Everything should be cooked and sent the day previous. Doubtless, Mayor Cranston will receive your gifts and forward them to the Hospital. It would be well to let me know a few days previous, how much I can expect from you, or we shall not know how to make our arrangements.

I make these requests knowing that your interest is my own in this matter, and I am in sincere confidence.

Yours,

K. P. WORMELEY,
L. Superintendent.

Deployable State of Affairs.—Perley writes to the Boston Journal that the news agent of the Associated Press is not only prevented by the rigorous censorship of the War Department from sending speculations which would generally prove true, but he at times is required to semi-officially contradict what he must know to be pretty well founded in fact. When those at the head of our government find it necessary to resort to such means to deceive the people, the moral aspect of our cause is truly alarming. Here is a sample telegraphed to the morning papers:

Washington, Nov. 11th.—The agent of the Associated Press is authorized by the Secretary of State and Secretary of the Treasury to say that the reports of Cabinet divisions on the measures of the administration, which have gained some currency, are altogether groundless.

An American Boy Instructs Napoleon.—Walking the other day on the beach at Biarritz his Majesty happened to meet an intelligent looking boy about eight or nine years old, who took off his hat as he passed. The Emperor courteously returned the salute, and said, "Are you English?"

"No," answered the boy very quickly, and drawing himself up, "I'm American."

"Oh! American are you? Well, tell me, which are you for, North or South?"

"Well, father's for the North, I believe; but I am for the South. For which of them are you sir?"

The Emperor stroked his moustache, smiled, hesitated a little, and then said, "I am for both."

"For both are you? Well, that's not so easy, and it will let the conversation drop," said His Majesty let the conversation drop, and walked on—Paris Correspondent of London Shipping Gazette, Oct. 24th.

TO HORSE OWNERS.

Dr. Sweet's Infallible Liniment

FOR HORSES

Is invigorated by, and in all cases of Lameness, arising from Sprains, Bruises or Wrenching, its effect is magical and certain. Harness or Saddle Galls, Scratches, Munge, &amp;c., it will also cure speedily. Sheep and lambs in their lambing stage, but not in their weaning stage, are beyond the power of this Liniment. No case of the kind however is impracticable, but it may be alleviated by this Liniment, and its faithful application will always remove the Lameness, and enable the horse to travel with comparative ease.

Every horse owner should have this remedy at hand, for its timely use at the first appearance of Lameness will effectively prevent those fatal diseases mentioned, to which all horses are liable, and which render so many otherwise valuable horses nearly worthless.

See advertisement.
